ABOUT THE ORGANIZATION

Our Voices Against Harassment (OVAH) is a youth and women led Tanzania non-governmental organization dedicated to ending sexual and gender-based violence (SGBV) and promoting gender equality. OVAH works to raise awareness about violence against women and children, providing comprehensive response and support services for survivors of sexual violence. The organization actively challenges harmful social norms that perpetuate violence against women and girls while prioritizing prevention efforts. Through its initiatives, OVAH empowers women and girls by amplifying their voices, advancing their agency, and fostering leadership to create a safer, more equitable society.

VISION

To create a gender-just and violence-free nation.

MISSION

To ensure the protection of children, youth, and women by combating sexual violence and empowering them to realize their rights and full potential.

ABOUT THE PROJECT

To understand the impact of the Elimika na Mwajuma project, it is important to recognize the challenges faced by schools in addressing Sexual and Gender Based Violence cases. Many teachers lacked the skills and tools needed to support students dealing with trauma and sensitive cases. Stigma surrounding SGBV often discouraged students from seeking help, leaving them vulnerable and unsupported.

The Elimika na Mwajuma: Championing for Safe Institutions (Schools) project aims to create safer school environments by transforming teachers into mentors who can effectively support students, handle cases by providing guidance and counseling to students who are facing challenges including victims of sexual and gender based violence or at risk.

OVAH trained 10 teachers from Kwembe, Mnazi Mmoja, Tandika, Kivule, and Mashujaa Secondary Schools, and equipped them with the skills to handle SGBV cases by providing guidance and counseling to students, and legal support referrals.

Throughout the program OVAH involved both teachers and students in various activities such as storytelling competitions which enhanced the awareness and action against Sexual and Gender Based Violence.

PROJECT OBJECTIVES

Establish and support school-based committees focused on SGBV prevention, incorporating policies and educational programs that promote safe school environments.

Expand the reach and impact of the Elimika na Mwajuma animation series as a tool for social behavior change communication, aiming to alter societal mindsets and attitudes towards SGBV.

To empower young women and children with the knowledge, skills, and resources needed to advocate for their rights, challenge violence, and support one another, creating a self-sustaining ecosystem of advocacy and support.

To significantly decrease the rates of physical, sexual, and emotional violence against women, girls, and children in Tanzania.

PLANNED ACTIVITIES

Capacity Building of Teachers to Respond to SGBV Cases and Provide Counselling

Co-Creation through Storytelling Competition for Elimika na Mwajuma

Development of an episode for Elimika na Mwajuma Animation

IMPLEMENTED ACTIVITIES

Capacity Building of Teachers to Respond to GBV Cases and Provide Counseling Activity

From September 4th to 6th, 2024, OVAH conducted a three-day capacity-building workshop for 10 teachers representing five schools: Kwembe, Mnazi Mmoja, Tandika, Kivule, and Mashujaa Secondary Schools. The primary objective was to enhance teachers' understanding of sexual and gender-based violence (SGBV), guidance and counseling, and reporting frameworks, equipping them to serve as mentors and provide essential support and resources to students.

The sessions were facilitated by OVAH in collaboration with partner organizations, including WILDAF and Sheria Kiganjani. These organizations delivered insightful training on legal frameworks and reporting mechanisms, equipping participants with tools such as the Funguka app, Sheria Kiganjani platform, toll-free numbers, and other legal channels for reporting abuse. Teachers were also trained on evidence collection and best practices for engaging with authorities. The workshop emphasized the teachers' duty of care, ethical responsibilities, confidentiality, and the importance of securing consent when handling sensitive information.

To aid in their mentorship roles, OVAH introduced the “Student Support and Mentorship Registry,” a tool designed for documenting key details about students they mentor, support, or refer for further assistance. The training adopted interactive methods, fostering a safe and open environment that encouraged participants to share experiences and insights.

By the end of the workshop, teachers demonstrated increased awareness of SGBV and a clear understanding of their responsibilities within the program. They expressed strong commitment to implementing their newfound knowledge and providing robust support systems in their schools. All 10 teachers pledged to establish SGBV Committees in their institutions, offering students safe platforms to report abuse. They also showcased a solid grasp of child protection laws, recognizing signs of abuse, and adopting gender-sensitive approaches to foster safer school environments.

This activity was a cornerstone for OVAH’s mission, addressing the critical gap in access to counseling services within schools. By empowering teachers as mentors and trusted advisors, the program aims to create a supportive network that guides, protects, and uplifts students, ensuring they thrive in a secure learning environment.

Storytelling Workshop Training for Elimika Champions

In 2023, OVAH engaged 1,115 students through the “Elimika na Mwajuma” project. From this cohort, 25 students from Tandika, Mashujaa, Mnazi Mmoja, Kivule, and Kwembe Secondary Schools were selected to participate in a storytelling and creative writing workshop. The primary objective was to equip these students with fundamental storytelling techniques, enabling them to articulate personal and community experiences related to gender-based violence (GBV) and inspire positive change through their narratives.

The workshop took place on September 27, 2024, and focused on enhancing students’ creative writing skills while raising awareness about the “Elimika na Mwajuma” animation series and its powerful community message. Ally Baharoon, a writer from Ubongo Kids, facilitated the session, equipping students with tools and techniques to craft compelling stories. This training provided a platform for students to creatively express their ideas and perspectives on GBV, empowerment, and social change, while promoting gender equality and fostering positive behavior change in their schools and communities.

During the session, the OVAH team shared the inspiration behind the character Mwajuma, the central figure of the animation series. Mwajuma symbolizes the experiences of many girls in the community who are survivors of sexual and gender-based violence. Key themes such as rape, grooming, and victim-blaming were explored to ensure students understood the importance of these issues and how to convey them effectively in their stories. The workshop also emphasized the role of teachers, mentored by OVAH, in providing guidance and counseling to support survivors of GBV.

The training deepened students' understanding of the "Elimika na Mwajuma" and "Mwajuma Simama" animation series, sharpening their creative writing skills for the upcoming storytelling competition. Students collectively selected sexual harassment as the central theme for their stories and left the session inspired to share their experiences with peers and work on their assignments. Through interactive screenings and discussions facilitated by OVAH, participants gained a comprehensive understanding of GBV, including its various forms, their personal experiences, and its broader impact on individuals and communities.

This process not only empowered students to become advocates for change within their schools and communities but also strengthened their ability to use storytelling as a transformative tool to raise awareness, foster empathy, and inspire action against GBV.

Elimika na Mwajuma Storytelling Competiton to Commomerate the International Day of the Girl Child

On October 12, 2024, OVAH celebrated the International Day of the Girl Child with a storytelling award ceremony and dialogue centered on this year's theme, "Girls' Vision for the Future." The theme highlighted the urgent need to address global challenges disproportionately affecting girls, including climate change, conflict, poverty, and setbacks in gender equality, while celebrating their resilience and vision for a brighter future.

OVAH hosted an engaging storytelling pitch competition where students shared personal experiences of sexual and gender-based violence (SGBV) and proposed solutions to these challenges. Trained in creative writing and storytelling, the students presented their stories before judges, teachers, OVAH staff, and distinguished guests. This activity aimed to co-create actionable solutions while inspiring participants through peer and expert interactions.

Two external judges, Lubacha Deus, a published writer, editor, and translator, and Faith Mkony, a psychologist and communications officer at C-Sema, evaluated the students' performances. Faith's expertise spans child protection, GBV, mental health, prevention of sexual exploitation and abuse (PSEA), and sexual and reproductive health and rights (SRHR), bringing valuable insights to the judging process.

Mashujaa Secondary School emerged victorious in the “Elimika na Mwajuma” Storytelling Competition. Their compelling narrative and impactful message earned them the honor of having their story featured in the next episode of the animation series.

The event also featured a panel discussion moderated by Ms. Irene Mara, exploring the question: “How Can Girls Lead the Fight Toward Gender Equality in Tanzania?” OVAH brought together 25 students who participated in the storytelling competition, 10 teachers, guest speakers, media representatives, and two student panelists, Hadija Ulaya and Baraka Ramadhani, who voiced their peers’ perspectives during the discussion.

This activity was a celebration of the resilience, potential, and leadership of girls, providing a platform for envisioning a future where their rights are upheld, and their voices are heard. The dialogue sparked thoughtful exchanges about gender equality, with participants reflecting on the pivotal role of girls in driving societal change and promoting gender equality in Tanzania.

A standout moment was when the moderator, Ms. Irene Mara, encouraged attendees to write letters to their future selves, imagining their lives 10 years from now. Students and guests shared their letters, expressing aspirations for a more just and equitable world. This exercise fostered deep personal reflection and reinforced the belief that today's girls are tomorrow's leaders in the fight for gender equality.

The guest of honor, Annabahati Mlay, delivered a powerful speech emphasizing the collective responsibility to create safer, violence-free spaces for girls and children. Annabahati, a dedicated advocate for ending violence and harassment, highlighted her work in raising awareness, stakeholder engagement, and advocating for the ratification of ILO Convention 190, which addresses violence and harassment in the workplace.

Animation development and dissemination

Starting in October 2024, OVAH worked on enhancing the script originally developed by students from Mashujaa Secondary School, which focused on the theme of sexual harassment. Once finalized, the script was handed over to Tai Studios, the contracted animators, who brought it to life through a compelling video animation.

This episode, centered on sexual harassment, addressed a pervasive form of violence that is often overlooked in the community. It shed light on the experiences of women, girls, and children who frequently face sexual harassment, highlighting how society tends to normalize or ignore these issues. The episode aimed to spark meaningful conversations, challenge societal attitudes, and shift mindsets around this critical topic.

The animation reached approximately 158 women, girls, and university students during dissemination activities held on December 5th and 6th, 2024. It was shared with two key groups: women from the Amka Mama Foundation and adolescents and youth from Ardhi University.

Through these engagements, OVAH sought to foster awareness, inspire dialogue, and empower participants to take a stand against sexual harassment in their communities.

Impact and Response From participants

The activity had a profound impact on the participants. After the screening, a woman from the Amka Mama Foundation shared how the animation opened her eyes to the issue. She remarked, "This animation gave me the chance to understand more about sexual harassment and the responsibility i have to teach my children about it."

Similarly, a university student from Ardhi University reflected on the episode, saying, "This animation not only educated me about sexual harassment but also inspired me to be more proactive in addressing it within my community. I now feel equipped to start conversations about this issue with my peers."

These responses underscored the animation's effectiveness in raising awareness, fostering dialogue, and empowering individuals to take action. By engaging these groups, OVAH successfully initiated discussions on a critical issue and inspired participants to be advocates for change within their communities. The dissemination of this animation marked a significant step in challenging societal norms and creating safer spaces for women and girls. We are looking forward to hosting more activities to reach a wider community through this work.

Activity Changes

- Initially, the plan was to disseminate the animation to both students and teachers in secondary schools. However, due to the tight school schedules and the time required for animation development, we adjusted our target audience to focus on university students. The dissemination to secondary schools has been rescheduled for January 2025, when it will better align with their academic calendars.
- Additionally, to address the high costs of animation production, we secured additional funding from other supporters.

PROJECT OUTPUTS

- 1 Trained 10 teachers from five schools (Kwembe, Mnazi Mmoja, Tandika, Kivule, and Mashujaa) on SGBV case management, guidance, counseling, and reporting.
- 2 Addressed 20 SGBV cases, with some referred, and documented them in the Student Support and Mentorship Registry.
- 3 Created one additional Elimika na Mwajuma Animation episode.
- 4 Screened the animation for 158 women and girls.
- 5 Indirectly reached 1,068 people via social media.
- 6 Partnered with SHERIA KIGANJANI, UBONGO KIDS, Tai Studios, and WILDAF for legal support and project sessions.

PROJECT OUTCOMES

1. Following the Teachers to Mentors training, teachers now confidently handle SGBV cases, which were previously overlooked. For example, a teacher from Kivule Secondary School successfully identified and reported a case of sexual violence involving a Form 1 student. By collaborating with parents, the teacher ensured the affected student received both counseling and legal support.
2. Students, particularly those who participated in the storytelling training, demonstrated increased understanding of SGBV. During the animation screenings, one student shared how she recognized and intervened in a peer's case of harassment in the classroom by directing the affected individual to a teacher for support.
3. Teachers have integrated safer approaches to managing SGBV cases, utilizing the Student Support and Mentorship Registry provided by OVAH. This tool has enabled the effective documentation and tracking of interventions and outcomes for students, improving overall accountability and support mechanisms.

SUCCESS STORIES

TESTIMONY 1: Madam Khadija, Mashujaa Secondary School

'In September this year a male student (form 1) student at our school had very poor attendance. At first, no one could understand why. This boy was active socially, and had good attendance. Using what I learned in the training, especially in recognizing the signs of a student who is at risk with SGBV , I decided to dig deeper. After speaking with some of his class teacher and classmates, we uncovered something shocking. This young boy was living with a much older woman, almost as if they were in a marital relationship.'

Without the training, I wouldn't have known what to do next. But this time, I knew exactly who to involve. I started a conversation with parents and together we worked with the local authorities to intervene. Parents reported to the police and the woman was arrested for further investigation , and the boy was safely returned to school. It didn't stop there. Thanks to the counseling strategies we were taught, I was able to support him emotionally through guidance and counseling , which improved not only his attendance but also his academic performance.

"Before we attended the Teachers to Mentors training, many of us didn't have the skills to recognize or address signs of sexual and gender-based violence among our students. We were often unsure of how to intervene effectively or collaborate with others to resolve such cases. But during the training, we learned how to identify students who might be at risk and how to respond in ways that could truly make a difference.

This experience made me realize how much this program has transformed us as teachers. It's not just about the students, it's about empowering us to act as mentors, collaborators with parents, and bridges to the community. The student is now thriving, and his family has been positively impacted. For me, this program proved how essential it is to equip teachers with the tools to protect and support our students."

TESTIMONY 2- Madam Veronika, Mnazi Mmoja Secondary School

Madam Victoria from Mnazi Mmoja Secondary School has been conducting group counseling sessions for students, raising awareness on issues like gender-based violence, especially rape culture. Through one of these sessions, she came across a case involving a Form Four girl living with her mother and stepfather. The girl felt at risk because her stepfather had started showing inappropriate behavior towards her.

When she confided in her mother, the concerns were dismissed. Fearing the situation could escalate, the girl sought advice from Madam Victoria. Acting promptly, Madam Victoria invited the mother to the school and discussed the issue, offering guidance on how to protect the girl. Together, they decided that once the girl completed her exams, she would temporarily move to live with her grandmother in Mkuranga, a safer environment.

Madam Victoria has continued to check on the girl, ensuring her well-being and providing ongoing support. This case highlights how proactive counseling and awareness can create a safe space for students to seek help and find solutions before situations become critical.

Madam Veronika - Mnazi Mmoja Secondary School

TESTIMONY 3 - Madam Eda, Kivule Secondary School

Two female Form 1 students skipped school with a male student during class hours and went to a neighborhood known as “ghetto.” There, they encountered three other boys who subjected them to the cruelty of rape and sodomy. When they returned home, a parent discovered what had happened and went to the school to inform the teachers. The teachers, aware that Madam Edda is part of the Elimika and Mwajuma program, reached out for advice.

Together they sat down with the parents to decide on the next steps, such as going to the hospital, the police station, or the local government office. Three days later, the teacher called us to inform us that the boys involved in the incident were at the police station. However, one of the parents requested a transfer for their daughter to avoid shame. The remaining student is still under the care of Madam Edda, who has been holding various sessions to support her. In the past, Madam Edda would immediately report such cases to the police, which often led to conflicts with parents due to a lack of agreement and follow-up. Now, the school headmistress understands how the case is progressing, and we, along with the police, can easily follow up and provide assistance.

Before the training, I often found myself supporting students in legal cases, but it wasn't easy. I didn't always know the right steps to take, and there were times I faced threats from parents who were unhappy with my involvement. It was overwhelming and, honestly, intimidating.

During the training, Ms. Veronika Buchumi gave us practical advice that changed everything. She emphasized the importance of following proper legal channels not just to protect the students but also to safeguard ourselves as teachers. This time, I made sure to involve all the key stakeholders including parents, the police desk, and even reached out to OVAH for support. It wasn't easy, but I was motivated to ensure justice for these children. Knowing I had a clear process to follow and support from other professionals gave me the courage to see the case through. And for me, this program has bridged the gap between schools and the legal system, making it possible to protect our students without compromising our own safety.

Madam Eda, Kivule Secondary School

TESTIMONY 4 - Teacher Goodluck, Mnazi mmoja Secondary School

'Before the training, many of us as teachers were hesitant to address cases of sexual and gender-based violence. We either didn't feel equipped to handle them or feared making things worse. Even when we tried, there were rarely any proper recommendations or follow-ups to ensure students's long-term safety and well-being.

But after the training, now, I feel confident advising students and guiding them toward legal and counseling resources when needed. What's even more remarkable is the shift in how students view us. Both boys and girls have started opening up about their struggles because we've built a foundation of trust and clear communication. They know they can turn to us when they face challenges, and that trust has made all the difference. For Example , recently I handled a case. A Form 3 student came to complain that a male classmate was sexually harassing her with catcalling, which was causing her a lot of distress as she felt very uncomfortable in that situation. She approached me for advice. After hearing her out, I felt the advice was not enough, so they called in the male student at a different time to discuss the matter. I advised the boy to stop his behavior, explaining that what he did was sexual harassment and there are many consequences for doing such acts not only at school but in the community as well. The boy claimed he was just joking, but I emphasized that such behavior was inappropriate and unacceptable.

I did not speak to the boy in a threatening or intimidating manner like how I did with previous conversations with students but rather I shared my advice and perspective as a mentor, aiming to guide him toward better behavior. After some time, the female student returned to say that the boy had stopped his inappropriate actions, and they were now getting along well.

We are still emphasizing on the issue of reporting and seeing a student move from silence and suffering to open up truly push us to do more for them as we keep on fighting Sexual and Gender Based Violence This program didn't just teach us skills it changed how we connect with and protect our students, and for me, that's the most important part of being an mentor."

Teacher Goodluck - Mnazi Mmoja Secondary School

HIGHLIGHT

Mashujaa Secondary School provided access to a wall, which we used to create a cartoon mural featuring Mwajuma to educate on types of gender-based violence and reporting mechanisms. Over 900 students will benefit from learning and reporting through this initiative. Madam Khajida from Mashujaa secondary, in collaboration with OVAH, supervised the activity effectively.

KEY LESSONS

1. Stigma surrounding SGBV among students remains a significant barrier to reporting, fueled by fear of judgment and a lack of trust. However, trained teachers have successfully challenged these norms, leveraging the respect and trust they command from students to create a safer space for disclosures and support.
2. Partnerships with stakeholders such as NGOs, parents, and the media are instrumental in enhancing the visibility and impact of OVAH's work. These collaborations are critical to ensuring the effectiveness of initiatives by providing additional resources, expertise, and platforms for advocacy.

CHALLENGES AND PUSHBACK

While the project made significant strides, some challenges emerged. Teachers often juggle numerous professional and personal responsibilities, which occasionally impacted the ability to meet initial engagement targets. One notable challenge was inconsistent communication from some teachers, particularly regarding physical follow-up visits. This sometimes delayed the day-to-day support OVAH aimed to provide.

To address these obstacles, OVAH implemented adaptive strategies that ensured continued engagement while accommodating the teachers' demanding schedules:

1. Follow-Up Forms:

OVAH introduced follow-up forms, allowing teachers to conveniently share updates on their progress, challenges, and the status of student support activities. This tool streamlined communication and enabled OVAH to track progress effectively.

2. WhatsApp Groups:

A dedicated WhatsApp group was established to facilitate real-time communication, share updates, provide reminders, and offer support. This approach encouraged consistent interaction, kept teachers informed about project expectations, and provided a platform for immediate assistance when needed.

Despite initial communication challenges, these adaptive measures proved effective in maintaining engagement and support.

KEY RECOMMENDATIONS TO WFTF

- On behalf of OVAH, I would like to express our heartfelt gratitude for supporting this project, which has successfully transformed five schools into safer spaces against Sexual and Gender-Based Violence (SGBV). Teachers are now empowered as trusted mentors, equipped to guide and protect vulnerable students who are victims or at risk. To further amplify the program's impact, we recommend scaling it to additional schools and incorporating more digital tools to enhance outreach and ensure sustainability.
- We deeply value the engagement opportunities provided by the funders and believe that fostering even deeper connections with grantees can strengthen the overall impact. Beyond financial support, we believe offering opportunities such as advocacy capacity building, introductions to coalitions, and strategic partnerships would further empower organizations to drive meaningful change.
- Additionally, we suggest a more transparent and structured approach to documentation and promotion. For instance, we noticed variations in how projects were highlighted on WFTF platforms. While we appreciate the effort to promote grantees, we observed some projects receiving more frequent visibility than others. Despite multiple attempts to share our content, we had limited engagement compared to other organizations. A more equitable system for showcasing projects would ensure all grantees feel equally supported and represented.

ANTICIPATED PLANS FOR NEXT YEAR

To disseminate the Elimika na Mwajuma animation to schools and universities, fostering meaningful dialogues that help students gain a clear understanding of sexual harassment. Additionally, OVAH aims to partner with Crown Media to expand the reach of Elimika na Mwajuma videos, ensuring widespread dissemination across both rural and urban regions.

Furthermore, OVAH seeks to secure additional funding to scale the teacher training program, enabling more educators to become mentors equipped to address Sexual and Gender-Based Violence (SGBV). This expansion will empower teachers with the skills and tools needed to create safer school environments, provide guidance and support to at-risk students, and actively engage in the fight against SGBV in their communities.
